"Words are wonderful, but deeds are divine!"

There is a major difference between talking and executing. While talking may come easily to some, executing what one has said requires a great deal of integrity and righteousness. It is not enough to just talk; one must also follow through with their words and actions.

In today's society, it has become common for people to make promises and commitments without any intention of fulfilling them. This lack of integrity has led to a decrease in trust and respect between us. We are constantly reminded to be kind, respectful, and civilized in our interactions with others. However, these values hold little meaning if our words are not backed up by our actions.

Remember we are the 5%, who are not easily led in the wrong direction and our word is bond regardless to whom or what! It is essential to understand that our words carry weight and have the power to shape the perception others have of us. If we do not follow through with our commitments, our words become empty and meaningless. One mistake can be forgiven, but repeated instances of not fulfilling one's promises can damage relationships and cause a loss of trust. As my grandmama said, "One time is a mistake, two times is a shame, anything after that is a habit." This stresses the importance of sticking to our word and being accountable for our actions. When we make a promise, we are giving our word and it is our responsibility to fulfill it.

Trust is the foundation of any successful relationship, whether it is personal or professional. When someone's word is no longer valid, it becomes a problem to honor anything they say or do. It is like building a house on a weak foundation; it will eventually fall. Besides, when we fail to follow through on our commitments, it also reflects on our character. It shows a lack of respect for others and a disregard for the importance of integrity. In any environment, this can have major consequences on our reputation and credibility. People are more likely to trust and respect individuals who stand by their words and fulfill their promises.

As stated above, talking and executing are two different things. While talking may be easy, executing requires effort, consistency, and integrity. We must always strive to stick to our word and mean it. Our wisdom should align and show accountability for what we say and do. In the words of Benjamin Franklin, "Well done is better than well said." However, I love what Allah The Father said, "Words are wonderful, but deeds are divine!" Peace!

Adding on Righteously: "Words are wonderful, but deeds are divine!"

Peace! It's about commitment. A pledge (a word) to do. Not to romanticize where we only gain knowledge just to talk about our struggle and our Culture, but never truly take an active role in our struggle or live our Culture. We sound good. The nectar of life soothes our emotions, urging us to act, but we never act. Words are wonderful, but deeds are divine. It is only when we stop romanticizing and start doing that which we say (give our word) we are committed to that we will then truly see that which Allah The Father said. If we are a Nation of Allah's Five Percent, then why do we keep looking to the devil's social equality for answers to What We Will Achieve? We have the answers; we just need to stop doing only lip service to the answers. To build we need builders. Architects, accountants, teachers, lawyers, doctors, agriculturalists, soldiers, etc... Not to add on to the devil's social equality, but to build the Nation Allah said we would build. When we go to the table of Nations, what do we have to offer? To show that we are equal in the politics of nation-building. The maker, the owner, and the cream if what? Words, or words and deeds. The truth stares us in the face daily and is screaming so loud it's deafening. What We Will Achieve is our blueprint. All we have to do is collectively organize, strategize, pool our collective resources, politicize as a Nation, and hold fast to that which we have committed (given or word) to do. Build! Peace!

Peace! I do not make a mockery of one's faith, belief, religion, or way of life (Culture) for the truth of the matter, many of you are doing that on y'all own. If you say that you are a "Christian" and don't uphold the Church's Covenant and participating and partaking in those things that are not of God then you are not a Christian. If you say that you are a "Muslim" (need be Orthodox or NOI) and not following the teachings of the Qur'an or the Hadith of Prophet Muhammad, or you're NOI and not following the teachings of the Most Honorable Elijah Muhammad then you are not a Muslim. If you say that your Culture is I-GOD and you are not teaching, living, and fulfilling your duties as a civilized person then you are not true to your Culture nor to yourself.

There's no greater way to deal equally than with the Truth and it begins with being truthful with one's self first and foremost. Therefore, if you know you are not living right and haven't been living right according to your faith, belief, religion, or culture then get it right or let it alone. Too many of our people, particularly black people are lost and ignorant because of the lack of Knowledge (TRUTH) and not committed to who they say they are and what they advocate. We have this notion that we can do, participate, and partake in all those things that are unrighteousness and ungodly and still be able to receive the rewards and benefits of those who are living right and exact... Justice deals "equal" with all things and NO ONE is exempt.
